EMPLOYEES: PARTNERS IN SERVICE DELIVERY

How much smoother would your road commission run if everyone, from management to truck drivers, and equipment operators, were on the same page and functioned as a team?

If your own employees don't believe what is written or said about your road commission then why should the public?

In recent years, internal communications has evolved from simply sharing information to influencing employee behavior by helping the workforce to understand how their performance shapes the company's success. Approximately one-third of today's corporate communication budgets are directed toward messages and programming for the current workforce. Employees are one of your most important stakeholders and learning to connect with them as a team is crucial to your road commission.

Shannon Rolley has served as the Internal Communications Specialist for Jackson National Life Insurance Company® since February 2009; where she is responsible for coordinating the internal communications strategies necessary to engage more than 4,000 employees in 11 offices across the United States.

Rolley will share from her experience and provide tips on engaging your employees as key stakeholders and partners in serving your county residents.
